The Dude and Dudes.

It was at the Exposition That I saw her, dressed so gay, And she wore a thin, red Jersey And a forty-cent bouquet. She winked at all the masher, And she sorter acted rude, And attracted the attention Of the Exposition dude.

She wore a dog-house bustle. That would make a monkey laugh, And she flew about the building Like a Bullitt-county calf. Then she stood just like a statue In a melancholy mood, Until presently she "caught on" To an Exposition dude.

The night was good for walking And they didn't take the keers, They leaned against each other Like a pair of Texas steers. When they reached the maiden's mansion, At the gate the "masher" stood. She was wasting lots of "taffy" On the Exposition dude.

They had swapped the kiss of parting, When her mother's voice did shout, "Mary Ann, come in this minute— Does your father know ye're out?" It was then the couple "tumbled" For the old man, with a whack, Kicked the dude into the gutter And the bustle off her back.

At the Exposition.

Ed. Register—I will endeavor, if agreeable, to interest you with a few items concerning the Louisville Exposition.

We left the city of St. Louis on September 26th, at half-past eight A. M., on the Ohio & Mississippi Railway. At 1 o'clock we arrived at Vincennes, Ind., where we partook of an excellent dinner, for the small sum of 50 cents. The largest towns on the route are Olney and Flora, Ills., and Washington and Seymour, Ind., the population of the town last named being about 5,000. Apple crops in both Illinois and Indiana are splendid.

At 5 o'clock we arrived at North Vernon, Ind., and changed cars for Louisville; and at 8 o'clock we were in the city of Louisville. While there, we made our home at the Galt House. The Louisville Hotel and Galt House are the leading hotels of the city. The next morning we attended the Exposition, which is located in Du Pont's Park.

Mr. Du Pont was one of the first settlers of Louisville, and one of the wealthiest. He is owner of the street-car lines running from the city to Du Pont's Park and race grounds; so you see it was to his interest to have the Exposition in his park. Admission to the Exposition, 50 cents.

The Main Building is 910x620 feet, covering an area of thirteen acres. The building is handsomely illuminated with 60,000 electric lights. An amphitheatre surrounds the entire building. In the centre of the building is a large Music Hall, and in the hall is an organ of the same size of the one which was in the Centennial building. Prof. Jarvis Butler, of Baltimore, gives organ recitals, assisted by a chorus of five hundred voices.

Gillmore's famous band from New York is making music at the Exposition at a cost of $1,000 per day. It is "simply grand!" The Seventh Regiment Band, of New York, is also playing there. All Louisville turns out to hear them.

Kentucky is the leading State; next comes Arkansas, which isn't more than half an "inch" behind the former State. Each State invites one and all, while taking a rest in their parlors, to register their names, residences and occupations. Arkansas is more liberal than the other States; she invites all those that feel so inclined, to partake of a drink, from the Fountain of Life, of the Eureka and Hot Springs water.

Each State has a news depot, which is supplied with all the papers published in the State. Over the doors of each are the words: "Free to All—Take One."

Kentucky has on exhibition a letter written by Daniel Boone May 27, 1785; also, his spectacles and pocket-book.

On September 28th, the Arkansas and Texas Press Associations met at Louisville. The Governor of Arkansas favored the public with a speech. Hon. Fred. Douglas was also present.

The Colored Convention at Louisville was quite a farce. It passed a few resolutions endorsing the Administration, demanding an equal share of the spoils, and adjourned.

Many new field exhibits have been added lately at the Exposition. Arkansas has a pumpkin on exhibition which weighs 148 pounds, and Tennessee has one which weighs 167 pounds. The exhibits from Florida are grand—especially the display of alligators! The small ones are sold at $1.00 each And the exhibits from Alabama and Georgia are not far behind.

D. H. Baldwin & Co., of Louisville, have the finest and largest exhibit of pianos, valued at $80,000, which is under the management of my friend, Mrs. Estelle Edwards, of Montgomery, Ala.

The Art Gallery is a large brick building filled with paintings from all over the United States and Europe. Going in to the east wing of the Gallery, is Gen. U. S. Grant's collection of presents, presented to him while on his tour, consisting of three large gold boxes and two boxes of some other metal set with precious stones.

One attraction in the park is the electric railroad.

Lowell, Mass., and Philadelphia, Pa., have the greatest display of spinning, weaving and carding machinery.

The races of the Louisville Jockey Club are in progress, and give promise of great success. One race on Saturday was worth $20,000 to the winning horse, and was won by a New York animal.

The finest and largest charitable institution in Louisville, and the largest in the State, is the Masonic Home, for widows and orphans of deceased Masons.

For fear of tiring you, I will close by saying the Exposition is a "big thing." A. E. C.

ARCADIA, Oct. 14, 1883.

A Letter from Goodland.

Whilst cherishing none but the kindest memories of Bellevue and its pleasant people, duty demanded the occupation, at least for a time, of another field. I will now describe the region around Goodland.

It is drained by the heads of the Middle Fork of Black river and includes the west one-half of township 34, north, range 1 east, and the whole of 34, north, 1 west. The Middle Fork proper starts in township 35, north, 1 west, and Straden Fork bears the same relation to it that the Missouri does to the Mississippi.

This region abounds in splendid springs, and has a large percentage of land available for cultivation. Being inconveniently situated for transportation, the farmers devote much care to cattle, mules and hogs. The stock of sheep is small, as wolves are numerous and fond of mutton.

From a variety of causes, the district schools had run down; but in Sub-District No. One, T. 34, N. R. 1 W., the patrons are anxious for improvement, and the children are bright and tractable under judicious treatment.

The majority of the people are United Baptists, and their church is enjoying a quiet and healthy growth, and the clergy are doing effective missionary work in destitute places.

The general health of the region is good. In fourteen years' experience and observation the writer has never known an epidemic to cross the Iron county line on the Middle Fork. It is not supposed that disease pays any regard to county lines; but it is a fact that below the mouth of Strader there is a great change in the channel of the river. Above that point the fair is more evenly rapid, whilst below that point the tendency is to form into long pools—so that the current is slower, the ripples being short and there being more stagnant water. Down there the people are frequently scourged by disease. The Middle Fork forms very rapidly, its largest affluents all coming in close together. But as in the case of the old lady, who, being far from the church, was near the mill—if the people down there suffer disease, they are protected from frost. Last spring all below the mouth of Strader, so far as heard from, escaped the blight.

There has been considerable mineral excitement around here. If the writer's judgment on the subject would be announced now it would be against the existence of any large bodies of mineral in this region; but the decision is held up until after farther examination. Beyond question, there is a deposit of plumbago on section 29, township 24, 1 east. The writer found it long ago, and has posted the owner, so that the chance for speculation there is not good.

Whilst kept busy here, the writer still cherishes kind memories of other points, and especially feels keenly his separation by distance from the Arcadia Valley Teachers' Association, in the success of which he still feels a deep interest. If the Executive Committee can find room at the next meeting of the Association for a short paper on "Outside Truths in School Teaching," it will be furnished. That Association has done good work, and will do better in the future, as the views of the members will become broader and more completely systematized.

Among those who would bind up the broken-hearted and comfort those that mourn for dear Nettie, her old teacher in the Bible class asks a place. Being greatly attached to all his scholars, he soon learned to watch for her coming, and to feel a deep loss when her sweetly pretty and quietly earnest face was away. Her attention to the lessons was close. Her questions always covered strategic points in theology or morals; and he will never forget the sad, pleading look, that enforced them, and showed a true soul carrying a great burden and yet struggling upward to the light. What that burden was and who laid it on, it avails not now to say. She stood up well under the critical tests demanded by the ripened judgment of one deeply versed in the knowledge of human character, and his verdict is, Joy, oh, joy to her forever! Her burden has been so soon taken away and her work so soon done. Arcadia Valley has lost its Fannie Burney.

Mrs. Agnes Booth will receive about $100,000 from the estate of her late husband.

A band of Osage Indians will perform at the Western Agricultural Fair, in Ft. Smith, this week.

A New York brunette says that blondes are always selfish, and that they are exceedingly affected in their manner toward gentlemen.

According to the Atlanta Constitution, it doesn't make any difference whether a Lieutenant-Governor is nominated with Ben Butler or not. Benjamin is able and willing to run the whole shebang himself.

Mrs. S. A. Hanning, a non-combatant of the Alamo, recently died in Texas. Of that celebrated siege and battle, there are yet two survivors, Mrs. Alsbury, and the colored body servant of Col. Travis. All the American combatants were killed.

Rev. Allen Allensworth, of the Colored Baptist Church in Bowling Green, Ky., has issued a call for another national convention of the colored race to follow up the work marked out by Fred. Douglass' convention in Louisville. He invited all the colored preachers to begin collecting information as to the moral, religious and financial progress of the race since freedom came in. One of the main objects of Brother Allensworth's convention is to amend the "moral disaster" which may have been due partly to slavery and partly to the scarcity of missionaries in Africa one hundred years ago.
